Word of the Month - Phishing

phishing - noun [U]

the criminal activity of persuading people to give personal information such as passwords and credit card details by directing them to a fake website which has been made to look exactly the same as the website of a legitimate bank or other organization.

phisher - noun [C]

phish - verb [T], noun [C]

phished - adjective

In recent months, a major new internet crime wave has emerged. An increasing number of consumers are being conned into divulging financial information to fraudsters via the practice of phishing. An official-looking e-mail, allegedly from a bank, ISP, etc., is sent to potential victims requesting updated personal information on some pretext or other, such as technical problems or internal accounting errors. Via a link in the e-mail message, the user is then directed to a web page which asks for financial information. The fake web page can look convincingly similar to a legitimate source, since any HTML page on the web can easily be copied and modified as necessary. The noun phishing typically appears in compound phrases such as a phishing scam/e-mail, and the countable noun phisher has been coined to refer to perpetrators of the crime. There are two phish homographs: a transitive verb usually used in the passive as in ... you've been phished! - i.e. 'you have fallen victim to a phishing scam' - and a countable noun most commonly used to refer to the e-mail that triggers the deception. A participle adjective phished is also quite common, as in phished e-mail/site/data.
